Roll call

An ideal bread-to-lobster ratio is just one of the criteria setting apart the good from the middling. We taste-test rolls from nine different restaurants across Singapore

PINCE and Pints may be late to the lobster party, but brings with it the most buzz. And for good reason. It's the priciest of the lot at $48, but each generously portioned roll holds about 160g of meat from a whole 600-650g lobster, which is shipped in live from the United States and Canada to a proprietary holding facility in Bedok. Large chunks of steamed lobster meat are tossed in a barely-there dressing made of mayonnaise, salt and pepper that really lets the succulence of the meat take centrestage.
